Newly divorced, Kristin chafes against her sister's concerns about how she's faring. After all, she's redecorated her ex-husband out of her home, taken up yoga, and has a new love interest: a man she met by chance in the airport, to whom she felt an instant connection, a fated love she describes to him in letter after letter—but except for the single envelope his agent's new assistant mistakenly passes along to him, Henry Banks, star of the UK's most popular television series, doesn't even know she exists. From the author of Man-Booker shortlisted The Quickening Maze, Dream Sequence is a moving depiction of psychological obsession and the unsettling consequences of fame, and the surprising ways their distorting lenses overlap.

Adam Foulds is a poet and novelist from London, England, now resident in Toronto. He has been the recipient of a number of literary awards, including the Sunday Times Young Writer Of The Year, the Costa Poetry Prize, the Somerset Maugham Award, the South Bank Show Prize for Literature, and the E. M. Forster Award. His 2009 novel, The Quickening Maze, was shortlisted for the Man Booker Prize.

Praise for Adam Foulds

“It has been a while since I have read a book as richly sown with beauty ... A remarkable work, remarkable for the precision and vitality of its perceptions and for the successful intricacy of its prose.” —JAMES WOOD, THE NEW YORKER

“Electric ... Mr. Foulds powerfully achieves what Stephen Crane called the ‘psychological portrayal of fear’ ... fiercely memorable fiction.” —WALL STREET JOURNAL

“Foulds acknowledged mastery as a novelist and as a poet ... is often apparent in this book: in the ambiguous dialogues between strangers revealing unspoken intimacies, in the delicately clipped snippets of everyday life recalled in the confusion of war, in the lyrical broken-up sentences that mirror the physical and mental shattering of the ongoing slaughter.” —ALBERTO MANGUEL, THE GUARDIAN

After the collapse of Czarist Russia, former White counterintelligence officer Justas Adamonis returns to his hometown in a fragment of the shattered Empire, not entirely sure what he'll find. His parents are dead, he hasn't seen his sister since she was a teenager, and Kaunas has become the political center of the emerging state of Lithuania. He's barely off the train when he's recruited back into service, this time for the nascent government eager to secure his loyalty and vast experience. Though the administration may be new, its problems are familiar, and Adamonis quickly finds himself ensnared in a dangerous web of political corruption and personal betrayal.

Antanas Sileika is the author of five books of fiction and a memoir. He has been short-listed for the Toronto Book Award and the Leacock Medal for Humour as well as long-listed for Canada Reads. His work has twice been chosen as among the Toronto Globe and Mail's best books of the year and received two starred reviews in Quill and Quire. He was the director of the Humber School for Writers for fifteen years before retiring to devote more time to his own writing.

A historical work of non-fiction that chronicles the little-known stories of black railway porters—the so-called “Pullmen” of the Canadian rail lines. The actions and spirit of these men helped define Canada as a nation in surprising ways, affecting race relations, human rights, North American multiculturalism, community building, the shape and structure of unions, and the nature of travel and business across the US and Canada. Drawing on the stories and legends of several of these influential early black Canadians, this book narrates the history of a very visible, but rarely considered, aspect of black life in railway-age Canada. These porters, who fought against the idea of Canada as White Man’s Country, open only to immigrants from Europe, fought for opportunities and rights and won.

Cecil Foster is a leading author, academic, journalist, and public intellectual. His work speaks about the challenges that Black people have encountered historically in Canada in their efforts to achieve respect and recognition for their contribution to what is now a multicultural Canada. He highlights their fight for social justice and human dignity. In particular, Foster addresses the issues of immigration in his critical discussions on who is a Canadian in the ever-evolving social narrative toward a genuine multicultural Canada.

Praise for Cecil Foster

“Foster’s story of a West Indies community in transition is a marvelous read, filled with humour, sorrow, and wit, and told with the deft and gentle touch of a master storyteller.” —THOMAS KING

“With Independence, Foster elegantly equates the coming of age of his protagonists with the coming of age of the nation. At the same time, he interprets that enduring theme so aptly articulated in the writings of critic Wilfred Cartey: I going away. I going home.” —NATIONAL POST

Mike Barnes' Braille Rainbow is about perception across the sensory spectrum and the arc of learning about the world and oneself. These poems, organized in four sections, engage first with infant appetites, others, and social justice, before turning inward to traverse the perilous heights and depths of the mind, drawing on Barnes' own experience of mental illness and his years of caring for his mother in her dementia. The latter half of the book addresses shifts in ways of thinking and feeling that allow contraries to meet and inform one another, and concludes with poems of peace and nourishing meditative connection.

Mike Barnes is the author of eleven books, most recently Be With: Letters to a Caregiver, praised as “tough, lyrical, timely, accurate,” by Margaret Atwood, and The Adjustment League, a neo-noir thriller named as one of Maclean's ten best books of the year in 2016. Be With: Letters to a Caregiver

MIKE BARNES

Be With: Letters to a Caregiver is what its title promises: four letters to a long-term caregiver, drawing on Barnes' years of caring for his mother through the stages of Alzheimer's. Written in brief passages, the book is designed for harried caregivers who might only have time for a few lines or paragraphs, making it a dipable source of clarity and solace while also telling a compelling personal story. Barnes balances candour about the devastations of dementia with insights into its paradoxical and indeed often uncanny enhancements of life, the ways in which it can call forth capacities long buried by the defenses of full cognition. In the words of the book itself: "All people with dementia, and some of them strikingly, show depths of sensitive awareness, resilience rising to heroism, and a capacity for joyful relatedness that is almost totally missing from public discussions of their condition." The two-word title encapsulates the book's core emphasis on fellowship and accurate witness: to simply be with those who are actually before us.

Man with a Seagull on His Head

HARRIET PAIGE

October Indie Next Pick

Man with a Seagull on His Head tells the story of Ray Eccles, a man "now past the age when anything interesting was likely to happen to him," whose life is nevertheless changed when a dying seagull strikes him on the head. Waking up from the trauma, he finds himself obsessed by the last thing he saw before his injury—an anonymous woman on the beach—and is compelled to depict her both compulsively and repeatedly, initially on any paper he can find in his house, and then on the walls, using any materials that come to hand. Eventually discovered by a couple of collectors of Outsider Art, he becomes one of the most celebrated artists of the last half of the twentieth century. From here the story explodes into four disparate but interrelated narratives.

Seagull is a novel about the impossibility of ever really knowing anyone and the electric charge that comes from real connection. Beautiful, lyrical, and profoundly moving, it heralds a wonderfully original new voice.

Late Breaking

K.D. MILLER

A gothic, uncanny mosaic inspired by the paintings of Alex Colville, Late Breaking offers a chilling portrait of a small and aging community. Exploring the vulnerability of the elder heart, and proving that love and sex and heartbreak are not only the domain of the young, this gorgeous linked collection of short fiction offers up a strong whiff of Jackson-esque gothic. Each character appears in at least two stories, in a greater or lesser role, the most common being a ghost who “haunts” the book throughout. Death is a constant, in both peaceful and violent forms. Together, the stories crystallize into something more than a novel, and confirm its author as one of the country's best.

Madame Victoria

CATHERINE LEROUX

In 2001, the skeleton of a woman was found in the woods surrounding the Royal Victoria Hospital in Montreal. Despite a thorough investigation involving the hospital's records, a reconstitution of the woman's face, several missing-person appeals, DNA tests, and an analysis of the deceased's hair revealing not only where she'd lived, but how she ate, it was impossible to find out who she was. She was dubbed Madame Victoria, put into a box in an evidence room, and forgotten.

By everyone, that is, but Catherine Leroux, who was determined to give the unknown woman a history and a name. Madame Victoria does just that, offering thirteen imagined histories of the woman who inspired its telling, a constellation of possible pasts that range from the realistic to the post-apocalyptic. Madame Victoria is a book about a single, unknown woman, but it is also about nameless women everywhere. Like The Party Wall before, it is equally unforgettable.
