Meet the ultimate stack of attitude. This set of nesting dolls features a lineup of quirky illustrated cats, each with their own distinct mood and a snarky little something to say about it. From mildly annoyed to fully fed up, these cats perfectly capture the full emotional range of, well… being a cat (or honestly, being human). Equal parts charming and sarcastic, they're a decorative mood.

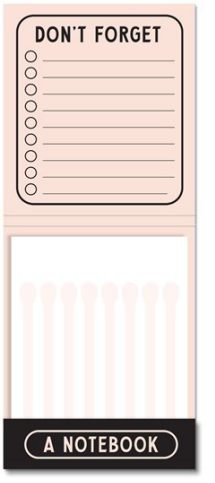

A set of nesting dolls, each featuring a different illustrated cat with its own unique personality, expression, and delightfully snarky phrase. Each cat stacks neatly inside the next, creating a layered collection of feline feelings in one compact display.

Finally, a party game that actually gets you off the couch. Half the Battle is a complete-the-picture game—but there's a catch: you can only use whatever random stuff you find around the room. Equal parts creative challenge and chaotic scavenger hunt, it's all about turning everyday objects into ridiculous masterpieces. The drawing is only half the battle… what you build is where things get interesting.

200 two-sided prompt cards, each featuring a partially illustrated image to complete. Players draw a card, then roam the room using anything they can find to finish the scene in the most creative (or unhinged) way possible. Also includes simple instructions to keep the game moving and the laughs coming.

It's like six degrees of Kevin Bacon… but with literal bacon (and honestly, way more chaos). Inside, you'll find a stack of completely random people, places, and things—and your job is to connect them in the most clever, unhinged, or downright ridiculous way possible. The connections don't have to be logical, just convincing enough to win over the judge. The weirder the leap, the better the laughs.

Hundreds of cards, each featuring a totally random person, place, or thing. The judge draws two cards, and players use the included paper to map out their best, funniest, or most absurd connection between them. It's part trivia, part creativity, and part "how did you even come up with that?"

It’s like a trivia game show… if all the facts were completely pointless and the categories made absolutely no sense. Packed with entertainingly useless knowledge and hilariously misleading prompts, this game turns “Wait, what?” into the main event. It’s trivia—but not the kind that makes you feel smart. The kind that makes you laugh, question everything, and maybe learn something you’ll never need again

A stack of trivia cards filled with bizarre, obscure, and wildly unnecessary facts. Players pick questions from misleading categories like “Poison Control,” then place their bets (1–3) on how confident they feel. Only then do they realize what they’re actually being asked—like whether the topic is Bret Michaels… arsenic… or somehow both.

More Poorly Explained Movies is the sequel that doubles down on chaos, challenging players to identify iconic films from even worse descriptions than before. Think of it as movie night gone completely off the rails, with 300 all-new game cards packed with hilariously confusing summaries designed to test your pop culture instincts.

Compete with friends to guess popular movies based on wildly misleading, painfully vague descriptions. Ever heard someone explain a movie so badly it almost sounded like a different film? That's exactly what this is. For example: "A goose suddenly dies and it makes everyone really depressed." (It's Top Gun.) Includes instructions for two ways to play-competitive or casual-so you can choose how serious (or not) things get.

Ever had someone (probably your mom) try to explain a movie and somehow skip all the important parts? Did it make literally any sense? Exactly. That's the chaotic inspiration behind this game. In Poorly Explained Movies Deluxe Edition, players compete to guess real movies based on wildly inaccurate, deeply unhelpful descriptions. The more confusing the explanation, the better the payoff. And yes, this version is bigger, better, and somehow even more ridiculous.

400 brand new poorly explained movie cards covering everything from classics to blockbusters to "wait, that was a movie?" territory. Packed with hilariously bad summaries that feel like they were recalled from memory after zero sleep. Perfect for keeping game night unpredictable and slightly unhinged.
